

To shelter in place

March 27, 2020 | 52 comments

Shelter in place. It's a phrase humanity has rapidly been educated to understand as governments are mandating tens of millions of people to stay home until the coronavirus threat passes.

To stop the coronavirus, we should do more than stay home, though. We can actively pray for a spiritualization of thought around the world that eliminates fear and dissolves false beliefs about the coronavirus that allow it to spread. Our proactive understanding of spiritual truth can have a healing effect.

I find a higher sense of what it could mean to “shelter in place,” in these popular verses from the book of Psalms:

“If you make the Lord your refuge, if you make the Most High your shelter, no evil will conquer you; no plague will come near your home. For he will order his angels to protect you wherever you go” \(Psalm 91:9-11, NLT\).

When ordered to “shelter in place,” we can do more than remain in our house. We can take our thought to the Most High, to God, where fear dissolves, false beliefs fade and calm takes over. We can shelter with Truth and Love.

As we demonstrate peace in our home and thought, we can also pray for the “home” of humanity and see our neighbors around the world sheltered in that same Secret Place of the Most High where the coronavirus is harmless.

To shelter in place does not mean, stay home, idly pass the hours away and accomplish little. It's a call to action to pray, shelter with God and to include all humanity in your prayers for healing.

Let's see everyone sheltered by the Most High where the virus is harmless. It can end the pandemic.

Categorized under: God, health, home, prayer, purpose

Tagged with: death, evil, goals